At this Point, a Confluence

Less enterprising men would have left the beautiful ruin of a city to moulder away and decay, but the Sacramentans could not be induced to forego the work of a decade just for the disasters of a month.

Editorial, The Sacramento Bee, October 3,1865

Before rousting the American from its bed, a century before sobering the Sacramento's snowmelt with a catch and release schedule, they stood in the park to watch two rivers mix: one ran muddy from paddlewheels and boilers, the other spooned the city like a lazy morning lover.

Citizens feared that an inconsolable river would stumble home angry and drunk, bring everyone down to its banks for a baptism, wash away the sins and signs of order, civility.

It took twelve years for a sidewalk of dismantled steamships, fraying even before it was finished, to float the city on stilts the river thickening with silt from the mines the mines that pushed the railroad to Promontory the railroad that promised a passage east by way of the west.

A streetside frescoed Virgin of Guadalupe watched over flocks of families spilling between pushcarts and Pullman coaches where the docks met the tracks that obliterated time, space.

ADLUH

A thin slice of cinderblock, seven stories high squares against the sky, a downtown silo with what is left of the working wage. Harvest rains within windowless walls of whitewashed ads, which flash neon on and off again in an Amen cadence slowed to pace the rails and Congaree canals that once mapped coastal plains. Reapers' fruit goes crushing, grinding, gristing. Who set it flowing, this nourishing dust sitting in the middle of time, no plains, no past? What talk was wrought in the wheat stalk fields? Succession in Iowa

Contrails bend pink and north over Osceola, hot trails dragging behind what makes them roar, passing through other ragged clouds tossed across the darkening sky.

A train whistle wails over rip rap creek beds, calling to the grain towers that huddle like rocket thrusters on hills combed neat as heads of hair. When those engines finish shouting hosanna, echoing off the paved hills, their thunder trickles through summer cottonwood branches, where the noise could be mistaken for herds of buffalo.

Palimpsest

I.

Where black asphalt splits an ancient trail, which fauna have not forgotten, a tom fans royal feathers for his brood, who drip their gray drop bodies from terra cotta roof tops and swagger the asphalt's addresses even to odd, stopping traffic with red, round authority.

Sidelit by the low sun, the crossing guard folds up crimson feathers and marches over to where, in a panic of wings, the flock takes to the sky, trailing molt like the stains of scraped away ink on a map's second draft.

II.

A hand-drawn map needs RE-visioning when memory leaks through borders. Black Mountain's first campus now tithes for the Scots' god, its Lee Hall rocking chairs answering traditional on the valley-side porch. The lower pasture of its second, paradisal Eden fell back to being just another exit before Bat Cave.

To stand on the open field with the old tobacco barn that never dried leaves, only paint, speaks the difference between rhododendron and mountain laurel: one should never build a campfire without telling them apart. Is an uncured branch still poisonous without geography? Departure means a separation from vitality.

III.

Black ink traces a communicative edge. It is right to resist declension narratives, it is just that location is never where we left it.

IV.
What the map can't tell:
The time of year the night is as hot as the day.
That a bobcat's cry sounds like a human baby.
How mating love bugs resemble Chinook helicopters.
Why redbuds bloom before dogwoods, and which is prettier.
Which granite face eroded to make this creek sand.
How to pedal past a timber rattlesnake.
Why dance moves look like domestic chores.
That when getting off a plane in sandals, humidity affects the feet first.
